Q: Does the RSpec's default `run` include the `example` files? I'm trying to learn RSpec and I don't understand what are the default and proper words for "run" and "example" in RSpec. For example, if I do `$ rspec spec/models/post_spec.rb` does it mean that the example files are run? The first RSpec's tutorial says that "Example files" are the default name for "run". But I can't find any arguments for or against it. Could someone explain this subject? A: In RSpec, the command "example" refers to the files that are the subject of your spec. The default spec file generated by RSpec contains a bunch of examples in addition to the spec file itself. You can see an example of the spec file and its examples in the output from "rspec spec". You can see where it picks up examples by examining the last few lines of the spec. If the spec file does not contain a "it" method, then the "it" method in the examples will run. You can have a spec that includes different subject files that produce different outputs. If your spec file is called "spec/models/post_spec.rb", then the "rspec spec" command will run your entire example file and will leave out the example files as specified in the spec file. If your spec file is called "spec/models/post_spec.rb", then "rspec spec" will run only the examples, and it will leave out the subject file since it's already in the process of running. Note that, although "it" and "subject" are aliases, you can use "it" or "subject" to refer to one or the other. You can see more about RSpec's built in "example" files in the RSpec documentation. A: No, it doesn't mean anything special. `$ rspec spec/models/post_spec.rb` Will run the example group in the file called `post_spec.rb` `$ rspec spec/models/user_spec.rb` Will run the example group in the file called `user_spec.rb` `$ rspec spec/models/post_spec.rb should_delete_user` Will run the example group in the file called `post_spec.rb` The example group is

Q: Parse HTML of a remote URL in C# I was wondering what the best approach is to get the HTML of a remote URL. I have managed to get this in a `HttpRequest` object: `HttpRequest myRequest = (HttpRequest)HttpRequest.Create(new Uri("")); myRequest.Method = "GET"; HttpResponseMessage response = (HttpResponse)myRequest.GetResponse(); StreamReader responseStream = new StreamReader(response.GetResponseStream()); string responseFromServer = responseStream.ReadToEnd();` This is basically the code that would be used to get the HTML of the "local" page, i.e. What I would like to do is take this code and make it a new function that gets the HTML of a remote URL. I'm looking for the best approach to do this. I was thinking something like this, but it doesn't seem to work. `HttpRequest myRequest = (HttpRequest)HttpRequest.Create(new Uri("")); myRequest.Method = "GET"; HttpResponseMessage response = (HttpResponse)myRequest.GetResponse(); StreamReader responseStream = new StreamReader(response.GetResponseStream()); string responseFromServer = responseStream.ReadToEnd();` Just to note, I have to use the `GetResponse()` function as I have a lot of code that would get a lot more messy if I used the `GetResponseStream()` method. Thank you. A: you cannot get the response of an arbitrary remote server, unless your server is a proxy or some program running on the server actually serves pages, i.e. your own page. http response is never served by a server, it is just a response text sent back in a HTTP request you need to read your page from disk. Depending on how you are planning to consume the page, you have many options use `WebBrowser` and fill a `MemoryStream` with the page load the page into a `WebBrowser` and then use `WebBrowser.DocumentText` use `WebClient.DownloadString` to get the whole page (you'll need to work with the response stream yourself). Q: Is
